1. Read the following text:

Islands of the South Pacific

There are many islands in the South Pacific. These are tropical islands. The weather is warm all year round. The trees on the island are coconut palms. They are very useful because they grow well in sandy and salty places near the seashore where other kinds of trees can't grow. The coconuts give food. The islanders can dry the nuts and sell them to make oil. They can also use the trunks of the trees for building and the leaves for making roofs for their houses.

2. Answer the following questions:

- What are the islands in the South Pacific called?
- What's the weather like on these tropical islands?
- Why are coconuts useful?
